Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: . in springs and streams, and herders can drive their sheep everywhere with the surety of finding plenty of water. The region so far has been used only for summer range, the sheep being driven into the low sage brush hills along the Snake or westward along the lower Payette for winter pasturage. Because of the high altitude with consequent long winter seasons of deep snows, the proposed reserve region will probably never be used for winter range. The sheep are driven into the hills early in May, and snows drive them out again in middle September, so that the real grazing season is a short one. There are no lambing grounds in the region, these all being southward along the Snake River, where, because of much lower elevation, the winters are milder. The sheep are owned largely in Boise, though a few bands come in from Mountainhome on the south, Hailey and Ketchum on the east, and Caldwell and other points on the west. Exact figures as to the number of sheep in the region were not attainable, but a well-known sheep man gave an estimate of 30,000 head. In Stanley Basin, Bear Valley, and other basins surrounding this reserve there are many times this number. Pratt Son, of Boise, last year ran about 15,000 sheep in and about the Bear Valley country, largely outside of the proposed reserve. To the northward, in Bear Basin, Cupp Son, of Caldwell, were running 12,000 sheep. On the...
