A study of the delinquent children of the court was published four years ago and it was planned to follow that volume with similar studies of the truant and the dependent children who also come before the Chicago Court. The present volume, however, has taken us beyond the juvenile court children with whom we began. A study of truant children, which was planned as the second volume in a juvenile court series, led us into the larger problem of school attendance, for it was apparent that a study of truancy would be of little value without an inquiry into the broader questions of non-attendance during the compulsory-attendance period and the enforcement of the child labor laws which should protect the children who are near the age when the required period of school attendance comes to an end. Thirty-three years have passed since the principle of compulsory school attendance was adopted in the state of Illinois by the passing of the first Act to secure to children the benefit of an elementary education.
