Still, however much may be said in excuse for their cowardice, and, however we may admire, and should study to imitate the apostle's general bearing towards those who had forsaken him in his danger, we ought not to fail to note carefully the circumstances which give it aggravation, and we may find much material for profitable thought, and much motive for self-examination, and much cause, it may be, for Belfreproach, as we contemplate the facts presented by our text. Paul the aged, Paul the prisoner, standing alone, deserted by those who were pledged by the bonds of a oommon faith, we might almost say of a common nature, to the rallying round the apostle, and sharing, if they could not ward off his danger. Such is the picture. We ask you--we need hardly appeal to you--to bring to its contemplation a serious and fervent gaze; Come with us, and see what is to be learnt from this simple, but affecting statement-- At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me. Now, we have already intimated that the second Epistle to Timothy, wherein our text occurs, was composed shortly before the death of St. Paul. There are expressions in it which indicate a knowledge on the part of the apostle, that the time of his departure was at hand. For I am now ready to be offered,...
